

Cellular telephones should NOT be allowed on commercial flights. When you are sitting next to someone on a plane, you are a captive audience. If you are trying to read or sleep or talk to the person on the other side of you, having somebody jabbering away in the seat next to you is extremely irritating.

Perhaps the airlines could make the last four rows designated cell phone rows, the way they used to be smoking rows in the old days, with the proviso that there would have to be a sound-proof barrier of some kind between those rows and the rest of the plane. That might not be so good, security-wise, however. Therefore . . .

NO CELL PHONES ON PLANES.

I cannot stress my displeasure at the idea enough.

Thank you.
